

It is tempting to ask if anyone really needed a van this small, but Goggomobil were successful in making scaled-down cars and commercials.

Having the appearance of some sort of advanced guard of alien invaders, the Bond Bug looks even more startling today than it did at the time.

The Cornish-made Blackjack Avion was a much better-looking take on a three-wheel Citroen 2CV conversion than many that were made in the 1980s and 1990s.

This C1930 Singer is by no means a big car, but it towers over a Berkeley.

For those who feel that there are too many dials and buttons in modern cars...

This is not only the way to pump up a Bond front tyre, but also how it has to be kick-started. The engine also turns with the steering!

It is great that there are enthusiasts who preserve these rare models for our occasional perusal, so long live this esoteric corner of motoring history!
